Stock Market Summary - Week Ending Oct 30, 2026

Prepared by: Anjali Govind Kadam

It was a pretty interesting week on the street. We saw a decent bit of recovery across the main indices, with Nifty finally breaking out of its recent sideways crawl to close out Friday at 23,053.10, up about half a percent. Sensex followed a similar path, gaining around 0.42% to settle at 74,459.53. Over in the US, things were a bit quieter and more cautious as the S&P 500 dipped slightly by 0.15% to finish at 5,820.10.

Sector-wise, IT was easily the star of the week. A lot of institutional money seemed to rotate back into tech names as a defensive play, pushing the IT index up by nearly 2%. On the flip side, banking stocks faced some minor headwinds. The BSE Banked ended up being the biggest drag on the broader market, dropping roughly half a percent just from normal profit-booking after its recent run.

Looking at the heavyweights, HDFC Bank had a really strong showing on Friday, climbing 1.39% to finish at ₹692.80. TCS also had a solid green day, gaining about 1% to close at ₹2,502.60. Reliance was pretty much flat, down just a tiny fraction at ₹1,164.90 as energy stocks mostly drifted sideways.

The big talking point right now is still the July-September corporate earnings season. Traders are parsing through the numbers company by company, which is causing some sharp stock-specific moves even though the broader index looks relatively stable.
